Court Clears Track for Rail Wage Rise

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Chicago
A PETITION by Western railA roads to set aside an award increasing the pay of locomotive firemen and "hostlers" on 55 systems was dismissed Feb. 1 by Judge George A. Carpenter in Federal District Court.

The effect of the dismissal is to make the increase effective unless the roads take an appeal to the United States Circuit Court. They have 10 days in which to ask a review by the higher court. Whether an appeal will be taken rests with the executives of the Western Roads' Association, declared Kenneth Burgess, general counsel for the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, who represented the roads in the litigation.

During 1927, according to the Automobile Chamber of Commerce, there were 20,140,000 cars registered in the United States. After reviewing the evolution of copyright protection, he observes: "Until today literary and artistic property has been confounded with the right of the author, involving them in a single concept. The right of the author is a special right, very different from that of the property. Man has all rights on the products of his spirit, and just as the fruit of his labors is protected, so the concep-tions of his intelligence should be respected in all their forms.

Premier Explains Reasons for Paris and Tokyo Appointments

OTTAWA-Canada's political status and the reasons for establishing diplomatic relations with Paris and Tokyo were taken up at some length by W. L. Mackenzie King, the Prime Minister, in resuming the debate on the address on Tuesday. First, however, he replied to further criticisms made by R. B. Bennett, Opposition leader, the previous day, as regards the return of the natural resources to Alberta and the Government's immigration policy, declaring that the former was now in process of a satisfactory settlement, and that the latsettler was bringing to Canada far more settler from Great Britain and northern Europe than were going to other parts of the Empire and was iging an influx of highly desirable citizens.

Community of Free Nations Canada's new status had been a matter of evolution and was definite and secure, continued the Prime Minister. "I submit that the greatest of all transformations that had taken of all transformations that had taken place in many years in respect to the British empire has been the transformation from the conception of the empire as an imperial unit in the form of a federation to this acknowledged conception of the empire as a community of free nations, all owing a common allegiance to the one crown, all having similar constitutions, and all co-operating with one another in accordance with certain well-understood principles." The Imperial Conference had agreed that the Colonial Laws Validity Act was inconsistent with this new relawas inconsistent with this new rela-tionship and the statute was being removed, he explained.

Unusual Practice Involved in Sinclair-Continental 33,000,000 Barrel Deal

WASHINGTON—Unusual business practices in an oil deal involving Harry F. Sinclair, Teapot Dome lestee, were brought to light by the Senate Public Lands Committee making an investigation of certain transactions involving the Teapot

A. L. Carlson, secretary-treasurer of the Sinclair Crude Oil Purchasing Company, testifying under oath to the committee, said that the board of directors of the Sinclair Company had approved a contract by which it purchased 33,000,000 barrels of oil purchased 33,000,000 barrels of oil from the Continental Trading Company for $1.75 a barrel on the same day that Mr. Sinclair, acting for the Sinclair Crude Oil Company, had guaranteed the purchase of the oil by the Continental Oil Company from the Humphreys Oil Company for $1.50 a barrel.

Tracing 88,000,000 Profits
Acting with Mr. Sinclair as guaranters for the Continental Trading antors for the Continental Trading Company were James O'Neil, president of the Pure Oil Company, who is in Europe and has refused to return to testify in connection with the transaction, and R. B. Stewart, president of the Standard Oil Company of Indiana, who signed the guarantee as a member of the board of the Sinclair Crude Oil Company. This company was owned 50 per cent by the Sinclair Consolidated Oil Company.

The committee is endeavoring to trace the disposition of the $8,000,000 in profits on this $50,000,000 oil deal. Some $250,000 in Liberty bonds have been traced to Albert B. Fall, former Secretary of the Interior, who leased the Teapot Dome land to Mr. Sinclair.

Witness Forgets Details Details of the transaction in which the board of the Sinclair Crude Oil Company, of which he is a member, approved the Continental deal, have been forgotten by him, Mr. Carlson informed the committee. He recalled that the board met in Chicago for the confirming action but did not remember just what occurred at the meeting, although he signed the contract.

"Explain how the board of directors of the Sinclair Crude Oil Company could approve such a deal and take care of the interests of the stockholders of their company."

Thomas J. Walsh (D.), Senator from Montana, conducting the investigation demanded of Mr. Carlson.

The witness could offer no explanation. He made no reply to a demand by Mr. Walsh as to whether the board of directors was "only a dummy board or actually business men doing careful business."

Native Instructors Preside Where Log Set on Forked Sticks Makes a School

Two forked sticks supporting a log and one or two planks serving as a blackboard often comprise the total physical attributes of a school in the bush of Portuguese East Africa. But this meager equipment, where no government provision for education exists, is more than offset by the desire of the natives to learn how to returned to Boston after seven years of educational work in Africa for the American Board of Foreign Missions.

"In the majority of cases the eacher in these decidedly open-air classrooms is a native who has stud-ied in the night schools of Natal, a section where native education is recognized by the British Govern-ment, and where many of the natives from Portuguese East Africa go to work in the gold mines.

"These gold mine night schools are unusual enough in themselves," Mr. Catlin continued. "The nativathere are forced to lead a most Spartan existence. They live in huge barracks to which there is but a single, closely guarded door, and in which practically every available inch is taken up with the bunks on inch is taken up with the bunks on

Features of News Gathered From Many Parts of the World

The history of the present con-ession covers a period of nine ears. In January, 1918, Lord Allen-by's army drove the Turks out of ericho and across the Jordan into the mountains of Moab. The Dead Sea thus became a British lake; a motorboat fiotilla was transported over the Judsan Hills and down the Jericho road; and under its wing scientific research in various areas of the lake was begun to test the commercial values of Dead Sea brine. It is estimated that 6,500,000 brine. It is estimated that 6,500,000 tons of water enter the lake daily. Its level does not, however, vary appreciably from day to day throughout the year; and we are thus left with the remarkable deduction that the daily evaporation under a sun which has to be experienced to be appreciated as a sun which has to be experienced to be appreciated as a sun which has to be experienced to be appreciated. perienced to be appreciated, carries off the whole of the daily inflow of water from the Jordan and the other smaller mountain torrents which empty themselves into it from the hills of Judea and Transjordan. Natural Evaporating Pans

The results of the earlier and less detailed research were amply borneout; it was further established that the adjacent floor of the sun-baked Jordan Valley was conveniently composed of a non-absorbent clay which would provide ready-made bottoms for evaporating pans and that the lie of the land would permit of the building of these pans with a minimum of preliminary leveling over an area of at any rate four square kilometers and, with unimportant terracing, over a further six; finally close observation of the experimental tanks proved, over the four years, that the steadiness and intensity of the sun in the valley was such that it would be possible to estimate production on the basis of four and possibly five complete evaporation processes yearly in the pans.

evaporation processes yearly in the pans.

Such were the technical results of the researches. But Dead Sea potash has an additional attraction as a commercial exploitation; for, compared with similar German enterprise, its production avoids three expensive processes. In Germany, the deposits are beneath the ground in the form of a solidified lake, which has dried up and been in the course of time covered. There, the deposits have first to be mined and then put into solution, while their subsequent reduction and disintegration from a liquid form to crystals involves artificial heating. In the Dead Sea the potash is already in solution and the sun, at no cost, provides a steady and rapid evaporation agency with a minimum of outlay on plant, etc.

WHEN making little girls' everyday dresses and boys' waists, it is an excellent plan to choose colors that launder the most satisfactorily and cause the least amount of work.

Blues and greens, for instance, hold their color well and are not harmed if they find their way into the bluing water. Pinks, on the other hand, are ruined if they are washed with clothes of a different color or the bluing touches them. Hence, a few pink garments mean stitches where the tucks run down too far.

Tucks may be pressed on the new garment without having a flat appearance by running the wrong side of the material over the iron, instead of passing the iron over the right between the hands so the tucks run crosswise of the iron, pull the material back and forth across the hot surface. This smoothes the goods between the tucks and under them.

Colored fabrics that may possibly rup should not be combined with a tuck across the front to take up white unless the permanency of the the extra fullness. When the seat dye is previously determined. White begins to grow threadbare, the tuck clothing had better depend for ac-cents of color on detachable trim-on the shabby side so the bloomers ming; and similarly if a colored dress needs white touches, let them As bloomers wear out faster than the frocks they accompany, this practice considerably lengthens the service of the popular little pante dresses.

> When Stockings Are Not Stockings Children's stockings that have been worn out at the knee need not be discarded. Made into socks for wear during summer play, they will be worn until it is not longer practical to darn the feet. Lay each pair together and cut from both stockings a strip from the top that is 2 or 3 inches wide, according to the size of the child who will wear the socks: these 2 strips form the cuffs. Now cut the pair off in the leg at about the distance above the foot to which the finished sock is to extend. Slip each cuff inside a sock and, with the sewing machine, stitch together the two raw edges. Pull the seam slightly as it is sewed so the top of the sock will admit the foot without difficulty This brings the seam under the top of the cuff where it will be held snugly to the leg by the child's garter.

Woolen socks that are beyond mending may be made into splendid mittens for little folk who never have too many during "snowman weath leave it long enough to pull up over the coatsleeve and keep the snow out. Turn the sock inside out, lay the pattern in position on it and follow the outline in stitching on the machine. # a retail store ideal made good

BACK of every great industry are the ideals of some pioneer, some leader, some mastermind-that hew close to the line of some great principle. To operate in strict conformity with the principles of the Golden Rule was the ideal of Mr. J. C. Penney when he founded the family of J. C. Penney Company Department Stores in 1902.

This ideal, this pledge, was unfailingly kept in his first store. No one was disappointed. Because people had confidence in Mr. Penney, they bought his goods and returned for more.

She thrust a book into my hand. Holding it lightly I searched every face quizzically for intimations of imports; and I rapidly decided that I must be careful in any judgment I pronounced. But I wanted to be enthusiastic. I knew and loved the book. To speak a word of praise book. To speak a word of praise about it was a solemn embargo at that precise moment. It might divide the company hopelessly, it might put me in a position from which com-plete extrication was impossible, it might turn friends into foes, a quiet hour into wrangling—nevertheless, the words were out! "I call that a good book." I said. A chorus of derisive laughter greeted my comment. When silence reigned supreme again a single voice sallied out: "A good book! tune in again, please!" At once my sense of importance rose.
Why should I be silenced by a flood noise? Why shouldn't I defend judgment against these barrians, or at least evoke a reason for their laughter? I looked at the keyboard of the radio, but no hand moved to touch it. Instead a quiet voice said, "I am glad you are on my side. I have had an awful evening trying to convince the present company that I am not high-brow in my taste for books. I have borne the full force of their attacks for some time. I now propose that we advance to the attack of their citadel." She waved a revealing hand over a number of books that littered the table. "What would you call this stuff?" she asked.

It was thus we came to the heart of an interesting discussion. offering a gentle remonstrance to my colleague on her use of the word "stuff" to denominate another's reading, what had been a

"Do you read with discrimina-tion?" asked Number Three with a one of irony and a twinkle of playful eves.

"I always strive to read with appreciation," I retorted gently, "and that carries discrimination with it, and a few other qualities one need not mention now. Have you read Conrad's 'Typhoon'?" looking Num-ber Three clear in the eye.

At this Number Five suggested that probably I had the faculty for reading into books something the author never intended. Whereat I acknowledged the possibility by saying: "Every reader brings something to a book, and everything so brough tends to light up or obscure the page.
That is the reason we should read a lot, for every previously read book adds something to the present reading; and the person who only knows one book (as a great man said) does not even know that."

Somebody interrupted by an audible sigh and the words "Too deep! let us get back to the main thoroughfare." Most of the crowd were in grave doubt as to what that might be. So I steered the conversation where I thought it might do most

It is quite as important (said I) to make the most of what we read, as it is to pay attention to what we read. The two coalesce if we are serious, and we ought never to trifle with books. The whole value of books to me is that they give perspective for the business of living. They introduce us to the sense of distance, depth, atmosphere, and fragrance, of our whole human story. I have re-cently read that in Great Britain the leading business men are asking for college men trained in classics, because they believe such men have a breadth of view and a strength of Women, children, mental fiber which modern business Gazing westward. sorely needs at its most strategic points. But be that as it may, read-ing good books gives an elevation of Halt s thought which rises above common-placeness in any realm, and it makes fine and splendid the ordinary tasks that everybody is called upon to confront at times, and it deepens and dignifies human life at all points.

Two women I recall, the first had great memory and a noble view of what men and women came into the world for; she had poise, culture, outlook. One day I stepped into her domestic scene in the kitchen. Amid the pots and pans and recipes a book not a cook book, as at first I thought. but a book of poetry. She told me that as she passed the book she learned "a line every time." The poetry has passed into her very existence and distilled itself in her every act. The other was a woman whose ering her backgrounds and opportunities for culture. Her speech had the ring of genuine gold, it was simple, lucid, strong and sinewy. Her insight into human affairs was uncurves; and she seemed gifted with subtle intuition. There was something elemental and grand about her. One day I came upon her reading the Bible. 'And in conversation she told me that "between stitches" she searched the Word; and in the quiet of evening hours she read it by the hour "for its lovely stories and blessed helpfulness." Both were women of a book; but in each case the book was a library in itself— "The Home Book of Verse" and the Bible!

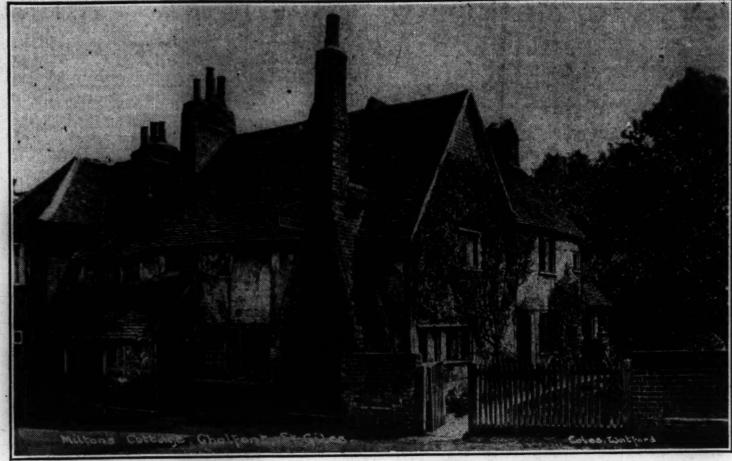

"Your examples are both women," said Number Five.
"What is worse," said Number

Three, "they are domestics; suppose you were a stenographer?"

"Well, let me give you an instance of the two in one," I replied. "A sentleman of my acquaintance has an office and in it he is called upon to do all sort of things, from manufacturing glue to writing an editorial. He always has upon his desk an anthology of outdoor poetry by E. V. Lucas. He told me once it put 'sweetness into glue and freshness into prose.' What more could you ask?" I questioned.

To all appearances they are the same as when Milton sat in the rooms, and many of the bolts on doors and lattices remain unchanged Milton's favorite indoor seat must have been at one of these windows. It is easy to visualize him seated here where he could feel the summer air blowing in, flower-scented from the garden. Only a door now leads to the garden with an old grapevine trailed over the wall. Delegates Accept Proposal

Made by G. W. Wightman -82 Clubs

Joseph W. Thurston of Hartford, Conn., was elected president of the New England Lawn Tennis Association, organised about a year ago, at the annual meeting held at the University Club of Boston, Tuesday. Reports of the officers and committees were made and accepted previous to the general election of the officers. An interesting address was given by the retiring president, G. Peabody Gardner Jr. of Boston.

Other officers elected are as follows: Richard Bishop of Boston, vice-president; J. D. E. Jones of Providence, R. I., treasurer; E. H. Bonnelli, Squirrel Island, Me., secretary; J. Brooks Fenno, executive secretary; H. S. Chase of Springfield, Mass., Francis B. Comstock of New Haven, Irving C. Wright of Boston, Donald M. Hill of Boston, Arnold W. Jones of Providence, Fred H. When Manager Arthur H. Ross of the Boston Bruins missed Tuesday night's encounter, it was the first time he had falled to handle the team since its start here in 1924-25.

Clarence Boucher started the season with the New York Americans, was sent to Niagara Falis and now is back with the Americans again. In the Canadian Professional Hockey League it is necessary to secure walvers from every club before the N. H. The big disappointment of the New York Americans is the poor showing of H. William Burch, center and selected as most valuable player in 1924-25, and as winner of the Lady Byng Trophy. His play against Boston Tuesday night was far from the Burch of old.

It is doubtful now whether any representative of the Boston Bruins can be sent west, with Manager Ross incapacitated.

Germany's Mistakes

A Review by LEWIS REX MILLER World Policy of Germany, 1898-1918, German merchant, as was actually Otto Hammann. New York: Alfred the case."

Europaischen Kabinette, 1871-

1901 appears to Herr Hammann to have been a tragedy. Germans did not believe that England would draw near to France and Russia when Bermany's hand was withdrawn, but that was what she did. Hope of the entente with Germany had hardly disappeared when England, no longer content with isolation, joined hands with France. A second turning-point came in 1912. Again Germany neglected the opportunity of a rapprochement with England, and "there ollowed an enormous increase in the inglish naval estimates and the conclusion in writing of engagements of as to common measures to be taken third power. An exaggerated determination to possess naval power on Germany's part led her to rush blindly past the second turning-point, which nevertheless might have offered auspicious prospects for a better future for the Empire."

Places Blame on Russia

"Germany's isolation among the World Powers," declares Herr Hammann, "that ultimately led to the coalition of all the World Powers against her, would have been sible if the grandson of William I and his counsellors had for years sought as earnestly for England's friendship as for that of Russia." In ight as earnestly for England's view of these statements, it is diffi-cult to see how Herr Hammann can treacherously sponsoring a policy of "encirclement" of the central

THE author of this book, first published in Germany in 1921 in somewhat abridged form under the title, "Der missverstandne Bismarck," and now enlarged and translated, was chief of the press division of the German Foreign Office from 1893 to 1917. To Herr Hammann, the fundamental error of Germany's policy since Bismarck's day was the failure to cultivate friendly relations with England. In the years from 1898 to 1901, there appeared to be a likelihood of an Anglo-German alliance. iest its gain. Studebaker and Packard also recorded good gains in the early trading.

Rails sold off 1 to 3 points, with the eastern carriers the hardest hit.

The closing was irregular. The list was bolstered up to some extent in the main flour when new buying began to appear in various specialties. Wright Aeronautical, International Match preferred, Transue Williams and International Business Machine made material advances, the last named reaching 180, a new peak. Diamond Match sold as high as 160 on odd lot purchases, and People's Gas, after breaking to 180, rebounded to 186½, another new maximum. Total sales approximated 2,000,000 shares.

Spanish pesetas had an overnight jump of 12 points to 17.09½ cents, but other foreign exchanges opened virtually unchanged. Sterling cables ruled around $4.87 3-18.

The bond market was quiet today despite the prospective payment this month of around $330,000,000 in disbursements to investors, more than half of which was due today. Prices sensially moved in narrow limits without establishing a definite trend. Bond redemptions in January broke all previous records when the total reached $192,500,000. The previous high acceptate was approximately $135,000,000, attained in April 1827.

New fork traction mortages again reflected rather heavy demand, New York Railway income 6s advancing a point, and interborough 5s gaining a farge fraction. A few convertible issues, particularly in the public utility classification, responded to gains of stocks on the "big board." Brooklyn Union Gas 54s went up 3%.

Revolution in Japan's Highway System Signalized-Motorcar Responsible

TORYO—Completion of the Tokyo-Yokohama Highway, from city limit to city limit, gives Japan the second stretch of good road in the Empire, and forecasts the system of national highways that will uitimately come into being. The road between the capital and its port city is approximately 50 feet wide, and is paved with asphalt. The only similar road now in existence in Japan is that connecting Osaka with the Port of Kobe.

It is only within recent years that this country has realized the necessity of constructing good highways. Until the coming of motorcars, traffic was confined almost entirely to pedestrians and to man-drawn carts, was and is universally used.

Japan has just entered upon the development of motorized traffic. The number of automobiles in this country is multiplying rapidly. Both the General Motors and Ford have assembling plants in Japan, and are doing a good business. Few countries are as admirably adapted to motorized traffic as is Japan, especially truck transportation. A small country geographically, and densely populated, short hauls by motor are much cheaper than by rail. It would seem a safe prediction that in the near future Japan will be one of the best markets anywhere for motorhest markets anywhere for motor-cars.

The Government, forseeing this situation, has worked out a comprehensive system of national highways. The various sections of the Empire are to be connected by wide, well-paved roads, while prefectural and municipal governments will be expected to develop connecting roads. As yet only 40 or 50 miles of this new system has been completed.

A. L. Flins, the board's rate expert, held that "from the standpoint of public interest and in the light of the Northern roads' evidence, it is public from the consolidation, while the disadvantages, as concerns the State of Minnesota, are apparent. They present the prospect of disturbing the economic life of large numbers of people employed by the Northern lines, as a result of the proposed economies."

Bt. Paul also filed a petition opposing the merger on the ground that the Northern lines would reduce by $1,500,000 annually the amount spent on payrolls in the city. Duluth was also represented in opposition to the consolidation.

Petitions from 13 towns and 12 commercial organizations in Minnesota and North Dakota were presented in favor of the merger plan.

TAX WEAKENED

Senate Passes Bill for Repeal-House Expected to Stand Firm

JACKSON, Miss,-Passage by the Mississippi Senate of the Castest bill to repeal the State Inheritance Tax Law has renewed nation-wide interest in a question of policy which many students of taxation believe likely will come to the front in various states in future consideration of means of raising revenues.

Though the Mississippi Senate voted 28 to 19 for the repeal the Casteel bill is expected to have a more difficult path in the lower branch of the Legislature.

That the tax has done more harm than good was the contention of its opponents in the Senate. They pointed to collections for the state treasury amounting to a little more than $200,000 a year, at the same time arguing that the tax has kept prospective investors outside the State's borders.

The bill was held in the Senate o a motion to reconsider the vote to pass it. A three-fifths vote is re-quired to repeal a revenue measure. The House Ways and Means Com-The House Ways and Means Committee is practically on record by a majority of almost three to one in opposition to repeal. This committee is committed to the George bill which seeks to place the State Inheritance Tax Act in conformity with the Federal Inheritance Tax Law. This bill was prepared by Joseph W. George, chairman of the House Committee and legislative observers believe it most unlikely that the bill passed by the Senate will ever reach the House floor with a favorable committee report. committee report.

Synchronized T.R.F. Circuits Shown to Mar Tone Quality

Attempts to Rectify This by Damping or Broadening of Tuning Not the Answer

This is the second of three articles based on the recent I. R. E. paper of Dr. F. K. Vreeland. It brings out a point sadly neglected to date, and that is the destructive effect of ordinary tuning on tone quality. Following the completion of this series we will describe the construction of a simple receiver based on the theory discussed in these articles, which has been privately used by members of this department for nearly three years, due to its marked superiority of tonal reproduction.

V. D. H. to its marked superiority of tonal reproduction.

radiocast reception, as any particular values of inductance practiced today by the ordinary capacitance or frequency, and they methods falls far short of meeting do not involve any assumptions as methods falls far short of meeting the conditions described in the previous article. A receiver whose selectivity depends on the use of tuned reconnected in synchronism, such as the tuned radio-frequency amplifier, has roverall frequency characteristic determined frequency characteristic determined by the well known resonance curve.

The ideal resonance curve of a single circuit without damping is shown at A in Fig. 1. The curve of such an ideal circuit rises to infinity at the resonance point, and at fre-quencies above and below resonance follows a hyperbolic law. When resistance or other damping is in-troduced into the circuit the cur-rent is always finite. At the resonance point, where the total reactance is zero, the current is determined by Ohm's law, assuming all the energy losses in the circuit to be included in its effective resist-ance. The peak of the resonance curve thus comes down to a point B,

At frequencies above and below resonance the curve drops off less abruptly than in the case of zero resistance and the actual curve approaches the ideal as the departure from resonance frequency increases in either direction. The graphs B, C, D of Fig. 1 are a family of resonance curves plotted for effective reistances equal to 1, 2 and 5 per cent respectively, of the capacity react-ance or the inductance reactance at resonant frequency. These figures represent what may properly be called the power factor of the resonant circuit, In Fig. 2 the same thing is shown by oscillograph records of the current in an actual

This family of curves illustrates effect of damping on selectivity. Damping causes a large diminution

when a resonant circuit is used as a selective element in a radio responding loss of selectivity, and reasonable selectivity cannot be semanted by the dropping off of the measured by the dropping off of the cured without a considerable distorrequency characteristic curve, Fig., within the range of frequencies ideal circuit with no damping would since the ratio of the current strength at carrier frequency to that at any of the side band frequencies tone quality of a regenerative re-ceiver, since the effective resistance is reduced to a very small value by regeneration and the response curve

As a practical illustration of the way this works out, Fig. 4 shows by an oscillogram the frequency characteristic of a receiver of well-known and very popular make. The width of this curve at its base is of the order of 15 kilocycles, the carrier frequency being 600 kilocycles, indiof the curve is so sharp that the side sulting distortion of tone is clearly evident in the output of the receiver.

In Fig. 5 this curve is shown su perimposed on a dotted rectangle representing the modulation band of signal wave having a 10 kilocycle limit. It is readily seen how small a fraction of the side bands is ef-by flattening the resonance curve by mitigating the distortion, but can never entirely remove it, and it is accompanied by a serious loss in selectivity. If full band reception is to be secured with reasonable the reactances of the couples X1, and 12:05 Shepard Colonial Luncheon Conis to be secured with reasonable selectivity, clearly something more than the usual multiple resonance methods is required. Band Reception Possibilities The ideal solution of the problem s a system which has a substantially rectangular frequency characteristic, that is, one which gives substantially uniform reception over a definite band of frequencies, including all the side band frequencies of the modu-lated wave, with a sharp cut-off for frequencies outside this band. Such a system in its ideal form would give distortionless reception, with a selec-tivity that is limited only by the over-

As a result of this property, the band selector unit responds with substantial equality to all frequencies within its characteristic band and is non-responsive to frequencies limits of the band is very sharp. The electrical and mechanical construction is exceedingly simple, and frequency adjustment is obtained by means of only the state of the sta means of only two variable elements operated by a single control. The band selector is shown in generalized form in Fig. 6. It employs two reactive couples, X1 and X2, preferably alike, each having a are balanced within themselves at the same frequency, together with a third reactance X3 which is com-of the two reactive couples and may improve the quality of reception be either inductive or capacitive. An input electromotive force is eans of damping, results at best in impressed on the system in any suitable way as at E and the output is

At any other frequency the re-active couples X1 and X2 will not be balanced within themselves. The result will be a potential difference across points a, b, the terminals of the bridging reactance X3 If the frequency is lower than F1 the reactances of X1 and X2 will be frequency is lower than F1 the reactances of X1 and X2 will be capacitive. Japan, China and Manchuria

PON his assumption of office, K. Kinoshita, newly appointed Governor-General of the Japanese leased territory in South Manchuria, dwelt at length on the desirability of Japanese economic entente, likening Japan and Manchuria to two wheels of the same vehicle. It is a happy simile that he has

No one who has followed Japanese policy closely can fail to have perceived the change that has taken place in that policy as regards China and Manchuria. Whereas a decade and more ago the military party in Japan dictated Japan's attitude toward China, looking upon that Nation as logitimate spails for imperialthat Nation as legitimate spoils for imperialistic ambitions, the business men of Japan now determine what Tokyo shall or shall not do in Manchuria. Although Manchuria is still regarded as Japan's first line of defense on land from a strategic viewpoint, the economic development of that land is the paramount inant with Tokyo. Political control is not desired except as it may be necessary to insure peace and order so that business may be done. War, that great enemy of the honest tradesman, with China or with Russia would be a catastrophe from the Japanese point of view and is to be avoided at all costs.

Japan is fully conscious that the economic development of Manchuria is possible only with Chinese co-operation. If Japanese financier and Chinese laborer be at odds with one another, both suffer. If China harbor suspicions of Japan's political ambitions in Man-churia, then Japan's economic activities there are sadly hampered. Like the two wheels of one vehicle, harmonious co-operation is imperative if progress is to be made.

In an economic way, Japan and Manchuria are complementary to each other. Geography been kind to Japan in placing that Nation in juxtaposition to the rich resources of Manchuria, as if to make up for the poverty of natural wealth in Japan itself. Manchuria remains one of the greatest undeveloped treasure-troves in the world. With vast rolling prairies capable of producing almost fabulous amounts of grain, with heavily timbered mountains and valleys, with grazing land for cattle and sheep in abundance, with coal and other minerals beneath the soil in unknown quantities, Manchuria possesses all of those economic resources which Japan itself lacks.

Japan, the other wheel of this vehicle of economic well-being, is able to command the capital that is absolutely essential to the development of Manchuria. No country other than Japan is willing at the present time to sink capital in China, and what American or British money goes into Manchuria must go there through Japanese channels. Japan possesses population for which it has not sufficient employment, a population which would readily go to work in factories handling the raw products of Manchuria if those products were but available. Moreover, Japan has built up an economic machine which would function to the good of both Manchuria and Japan if given the

The world as a whole is the gainer because the Japan of today clearly recognizes that political or military ambitions in China are sheer folly and that Sino-Japanese relations must be primarily economic. Unfortunately, there is no similar recognition of this fact on the part of the Chinese people, so that from time to time there is seen the strange spectacle of the Chinese blocking Japanese activity in Manchuria, activity which, if carried out, would be of tremendous benefit to China. Apparently there are statesmen in other lands who share this myopic Chinese view, as witness the blocking of the Morgan loan to the South Manchuria Railway late last year. The unwisdom of such a course, recalling the simile of the two wheels of a vehicle, is obvious. It cannot be too strongly emphasized that true benefit to one person or, section means really benefit to all.

Outlawing Strikes in Industry

SUBCOMMITTEE of the Committee on A Commerce of the American Bar Association is seeking, by diligent inquiry and study, to determine what federal legislation, if any, can be enacted to insure the peaceable adjustment or prevention of industrial strikes. Members of the committee, speaking for the association, express the view that the time has come when that organization must make a distinctive contribution in this field of American jurisprudence. Quite wisely, it must be agreed, it is concluded that before there can be a law defining a national policy there must be general agreement as to that policy. More than a half century was required to formulate and crystallize the American policy toward the liquor traffic and its allied evils. The law which was finally enacted was not sumptuary or arbitrary in the sense that it attempted to enforce a policy which had not been agreed upon and clearly defined.

So today, in appraising and analyzing a purely industrial rather than a moral problem, it is realized that it might be unwise, or even revolutionary, to attempt to enact and enforce a law providing for compulsory arbitration of industrial disputes, unless it is understood that all concerned, including the worker, the employer and the public, would be benefited by the peaceful settlement and adjustments of such misunderstandings as may arise in industry. Can this be set down as a considered policy which has been adopted by an overwhelming rity of the American people?

With this accepted as an established premise, the method of applying the rule of conduct has already been provided by the state and federal arbitration acts which are now in force and which have provided tribunals or commissions that have functioned in thousands of cases in the speedy and inexpensive settlement of com-mercial disputes.

It is true, of course, that industrial disputes party to these controversies has been obligated to submit to such form of adjustment. That was the weak point in commercial arbitration until steps were taken to induce contracting parties in advance to agree that any differences thereafter arising would be arbitrated, and that the decision thus reached should be final and binding upon all concerned.

Labor in the United States is much nearer the point now than ever before where it will submit its case to an arbitral tribunal. It has proved its ability to support and defend its claims, and it has learned that there is no conspiracy against it as an institution.

Earl Haig of Bemersyde

COMEONE has said the good many men do is seen only by chance gleams. That has not been the case with Earl Haig. Commanderin-Chief of the British forces in France and Flanders during the war, his work was ever under the public gaze, and if he merited and won the plaudits of men for his strategy, his daring and his unflinching adherence to duty, he had to stand the severe and often outspoken criticism of his compatriots for any reverse which his troops met in the course of the conflict. When the British forces had their backs to the wall, it was his message and example that spurred them on to victory. Dark days those were when hope, as the poet has well said, seemed but a glimmering light.

To some the tragedy of the war is so bitter that they cannot speak of it with a steady voice. The subject stirs poignant memories, and only the greatest patience and toleration prevent them from rebuking those who talk of war lightly or as if it were merely a matter of conversation. Yet there were services in the war for which no monetary reward, no military distinction, no plaudits of the populace ever adequately compensated. It was services such as these that Earl Haig rendered, services that brought relief to a world war-weary.

Sir Douglas Haig, as he then was, took over supreme command of the British forces at a critical point in the war. Upon his success there is little need to dwell. To all but the rising generation, it is common knowledge. Like all great generals, he was misunderstood. He stood aloof. His manner was austere, yet beneath the severity of his outward mien there beat a heart full of genuine sympathy and kindness. After the war ceased he devoted his efforts to helping the incapacitated soldier. He is reputed to be the originator of Poppy Day. So much did he endear himself to the people that they collected nearly £300,000 with which to purchase the ancestral estates of Bemersyde and presented them to him as a gift. Parliament, likewise, in appreciation of his services, voted him a gift of £100,000.

More than nine years have elapsed since the last post was sounded in the World War. The great figures in that conflict have marched across the pages of history. Conspicuous among them was Field Marshal Earl Haig. A soldier first and last, he met a great need when dark clouds hung over the Western front. The world has almost outgrown its reverence for the hero in war. Peace is in the air, and the sky is bright with hope. But it would be remiss in its duty if it failed to record the debt it owes to those who turned the tide of war and brought lasting peace within the orbit of discussion. Chief among these was Earl Haig, whose career was aptly summed up by Mr. Lloyd George when he said: "He was a great patriot and a great gentleman."

An Inconclusive Conclusion

TEMBERS of the New York State Bar Association, recently assembled in their annual convention, were solemnly assured by a well-known New York attorney that the Federal Prohibition Enforcement Act has resulted in "compulsory coercion," that has nullified the Eighteenth Amendment. This surprising discovery was, according to press reports, greeted with applause, whether for nullification, or for coercion, does not appear.

Following this assertion that "compulsory coercion" has had the effect of nullifying the supreme law of the land, Frederic W. Hinrichs, an attorney prominent in various municipal, state and national reform movements for more than forty years, was granted permission to question the speaker. Referring to the latter's statement that "private opinion cannot be con-trolled by law," Mr. Hinrichs asked whether this was not also true of the federal law banning narcotics. To this inquiry the bland reply was: "I have come to the conclusion that there is no analogy between the two subjects."

' This "conclusion" is of no more importance than his notion that "compulsory" enforcement of the Prohibition Act nullifies the Eighteenth Amendment, and would not deserve comment were it not that it is an example of muddlement constantly exhibited when the National Prohibition Law is under discussion. The American people have legislated to prohibit the sale of certain narcotics and habit-forming drugs. The drug and alcohol addicts protest that these laws are attempts to control habits and opinions, and in the case of alcoholic beverages assert that the law is an unwarranted interference with personal rights. In both cases the purpose of the law is the same: to prevent the sale of materials, consumption of which has been proved to be harmful. If "coercion" to enforce the law against alcohol is nullification, why does not enforcement of the acts prohibiting narcotics also nullify the Constitution of the United States? If the speaker referred to and those who agree with him cannot show a distinction between the purpose and effect of both prohibitory laws, their amusing "conclusion" must be regarded as an attempt to evade a searching question.

Who's 'Carrying' a Walking Stick?

LTHOUGH conservative authorities agree A that a cane is "a walking stick; a staff," and that a walking stick is a "stick or staff carried in the hand habitually when walking; a cane," there appears to be a rather formidable movement in social circles, especially have frequently been disposed of in a similar manner. But the appeal to arbitration has usually been the last resort, rather than the first. The weak point has been that neither as a substitute or synonym for "walking stick." among the element which would glorify the

In presenting their case the upholders of "walking stick," admitting perhaps that it may be a distant relative of the cane, probably would argue that, though a cane may have some of the characteristics and perform some of the functions of a walking stick, by no conceivable process of valuation or analysis could a walking stick be viewed as a cane.

There may be persons who, never having carried a cane or walking stick, do not care a snap of a finger whether a cane is a walking stick or a walking stick is a cane. Even the cane carrier himself may not take serious offense if some injudicious person should com-ment upon his walking stick. But the man brought up among generations of walking sticks is simply scandalized at the careless characterization of this most important detail of dress as a mere "cane." They are wide apart in the social scale, these two. They may look alike and in many particulars they may be alike, but in the last analysis this must not be forgotten - canes are carried, while sticks are worn!

Vicente Blasco Ibáñez

THE career of Vicente Blasco Ibáñez presents one of those combinations of literary and political work which are so typical of Europe and so rare in the United States. In America, Blasco Ibáñez was known, and known almost solely, for his novel, "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," and, per-haps, "Mare Nostrum." In Europe, on the other hand, he was known all his lifetime as a stormy petrel of Spanish politics, whose chief interest had always been the overthrow of the Spanish monarchy and the establishment in its place of a republic. His name recalls immediately those of D'Annunzio, of Zola and of Hugo, with whom, leaving aside literary quality, he undoubtedly ranks in picturesqueness, popular appeal and the capacity for making enemies.

Blasco Ibáñez was no Socialist, much less a Communist, and even less a Fascist. An outand-out republican, he took part in revolutionary activities and manifestations from his student days. While still young he was sent to Parliament, and for some years his career. seemed to consist of one exile after another. The final and most conspicuous break with his Government came in 1924 over the accession to power of Gen. Primo de Rivera. This resulted in his permanent residence abroad, and in the publication of the violent manifesto, "Alfonso XIII Unmasked," which fixed upon him the spotlight of Europe.

Throughout his restless career, Blasco Ibáñez was busy with his pen. He early attained a reputation in his own country, but it was not until the publication of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" that he became a world figure. The World War had diverted his attention for the time from the Spanish monarchy. He trained his guns upon the central powers, which, as he saw it, were bent on the destruction of Latin civilization. "The Four Horsemen" was a bitter attack on Germany and Germans. Its propaganda value was immediately recognized by the astute leaders of public thought in allied countries, and it was translated and widely sold throughout the world. Its companion piece, "Mare Nostrum," had a corresponding success.

The literary quality of these two famous propaganda novels is perhaps debatable; most critics do not rate them high. Greater critical favor has been won by earlier works, particularly by "The Cabin." But it was difficult for Blasco Ibáñez not to be, like the hero of his greatest predecessor, forever tilting at something. This probably did not tend to enhance the literary value of his work.

An element of loneliness marks the memory of Blasco Ibáñez, as that of many a man prominent in his time. An intense patriot, he found it desirable, even necessary, to live many years outside his country. Formerly he found asylum in Italy, but after Mussolini took the reins Blasco Ibáñez, foe of Fascism, was no longer welcome there. Between him and the central powers, of course, there could be no traffic. France became his refuge, and at Mentone he passed the remainder of his days. His regard for literature, and for literary men, is shown by his announcement last year that he would leave his beautiful villa and its grounds as a recreation home for writers of all nation-

Collectors, Beware!

OURISTS and those who winter in Egypt return each year laden with curios of all kinds, for which there is today a particularly ready market. The possessors of these, who in many instances will have paid large sums for them, believe, or claim to believe, in their genuineness. And to do them justice, it is not by any means easy to detect the forgeries.

Egypt is not the only market for these "treasures."
They are sold in London, Paris, New York, and most large continental capitals, and at some of the towns on the north African coast. And, indeed, advertisements have of recent times appeared in the London and other papers of Egyptian antiques for sale stated in house the papers of Egyptian antiques for sale, stated to have some connection with Tut-ankh-Amen.

All would-be possessors of "fragments of past history" should turn their attention to the fact that to supply the demand for antiques with genuine articles would long ago have exhausted every possible cache in Egypt, and that the stringent laws which have been passed by the Egyptian Government at various times absolutely forbid the export, and therefore practically the sale. + + export, and therefore practically the sale, of genuine antiques, except by license.

These laws have not only given a great stimulus to the work of the forgers, but also to the demand for jewels, beads, necklaces, statues, vases, fragments of mummy cases, scarabs and other things. They have also served to force up the prices even of forgeries to an unthought-of level. As much as £40 to £50 at the present time is often paid for articles which a decade ago would scarcely have had a market value of as many shillings.

Many of these things are sold for high prices, and the dealers or manufacturers find it advisable as a rule to return part of the money if the fraud is discovered, with the view of proving that they themselves were deceived, and are really dealers in genuine articles. + + +

The forger never considers that he has done anything disreputable; and his only regret is that he should have been found out. Hundreds of scarabs, many statuettes, and quite large quantities of pottery are annually palmed off, on the enthusiastic but unlearned collector. Often the statuettes are made from genuine bits of old wood, which were obtained no one quite knows how, but which were were obtained no one quite knows now, but which were too small to be marketable in any other form. Undoubtedly the only way to avoid being defrauded is to buy of a respectable and responsible dealer; one will, of course, have to pay a higher price, but on the other hand, one may reckon, with some degree of certainty, that the article is genuine, or that, if discovered to be false, its purchase money will be refunded.

To give some idea of the very big sums of which collectors are defrauded, one may quote the case of a lady who possessed a small cabinet full of beads, scarabs, one or two small vases, and various figures from eight to ten inches in height. These had cost her upward of £1200 and were only worth as curiosities perhaps £50. Her greatest treasure, a small mummy, was composed of old rags covered with plaster of Paris and painted so skill-fully that had it not been for the use of a certain tint of blue, which so far as is known was not discovered till the eighteenth century, the forgery might have remained

The Son of the Sheik

HE WAS such a baby! We hadn't enough Arabic to ask if he were the first-born, but if we know the signs he certainly was! His miniature jellab and caftan, his tiny silver ornaments and dagger, his talismans, his embroidered slippers, all denoted the proudly achieved son and heir of the Sheik who held him so tenderly in his arms that broiling het day of the Fantasia before H. R. H. the Sultan of Morocco.

Tall, wiry, straight as a dart the father; wiry, too, though only a baby of two years, the son. We could soon tell that by the difficulty his parent had to hold him at all, and the impossibility of coercing him to quiet. The young man was there to see the show, and he had no intention of missing anything! on of missing anything!

They had come into the marques for notables and for-eigners, and part of the "doings," at least for the Sheik, was to see his son receive the court of all in the tent! We contributed our praise and admiration unstintedly, and H. H. accepted it with gracious calm until he became bored. Then his wriggles were renewed and father's arms grew weary. Finally he wriggled himself down onto terra fifms.

A fanfare of trumpets announcing the approach of the Sultan put everyone on the qui vive, but we had one eye on that striped diaphanous white jellab over cerise satin, which encased King Baby, and were vastly amused to note that the Sheik, relieved of the weight and wriggle of his infant, was giving his attention whole-heartedly to the pageant of the Mouloud.

Not so the Son of the Sheik! He cared nothing now for the antics of those people out in red, dusty Aguedal; for him the joy of trying to crawl under the tent cords! He got so far toward his goal that father only retrieved him by one fat leg, causing a howl which a sugar candy was alone efficacious in stopping. That meant papa's arms again for a while.

By squirming continuously, however, Master Baby once more got onto the ground, but this time he contented himself with sitting down to play with a box an officer discarded at a tactful moment. We all forgot him in the excitement of the lineup for the Fantasia. Everybody rose from benches and camp stools to crane necks, the better to see that proud row of Arab horses and riders awaiting the word to dash across the Aguedal firing their ancient guns, tossing them in the air, catching them, and reining down their steeds onto their haunches within a few yards of our tent.

Ah! this game was what young hopeful understood well—many a time had he seen father do this, and he liked it! This part of the show was his special interest, and without hesitation the baby forced his way between some legs, past other silk-stockinged or booted-and-spurred limbs, out to the front, where he took up his stand, erect and fearless, looking as if he were there to review the whole affair.

So perfect his dignity, so calm his assumption of the right to watch his peers, that none lifted a finger to stop him. The wilder the rush, the louder the crash of gunfire, the more calm and imperious the baby! This was his show; foreigners might see it, too, but it was his own folk, his own race who were doing this glorious Fantasia.

The Son of the Sheik was "at home."

V. L. W. The Son of the Sheik was "at home."

From the World's Great Capitals-Paris

NEW type helicopter, constructed by an Italian engineer, Vittorio Isacco, has been purchased by the French Government and is the only foreign-designed aircraft bought in the past year, according to a statement just made in the Chamber of Deputies by Henri Pate, reporter of the air budget. The Paris-Soir, in a note about the airplane, says that while details are not yet completely public property, it learns that it has the fuselage of an ordinary plane, with a vertical axis about which revolve two monoplane wings. At the end of each of these wings is a motor of seventeen horsepower driving two small propellers of four blades each. These propellers turn in opposite directions. A larger, sixtyhorsepower motor is placed in the usual position before the pilot to drive the plane horizontally. This information is meager, but it does whet curiosity here to know more about it. England has also, it is said, taken the rights of building a machine after Signor Isacco's plans. 4 4

A "beau geste" on the part of France toward Italy was accomplished with the production at the state theater, the Comédie Française, of Gabriele d'Annunzio's play, "The Light Under the Bushel." It was more than a theatrical event. It was not simply the first time this theater had put on the play of an Italian author, but the President of the French Republic was there and the Italian Ambassador to France. The performance in the graceful manner of the Latin peoples was intended as a compli ment from the one race to the other. It was an effort to pour oil on the waters between the two countries which have seemed for some time to be troubled. Some might disagree with the choice of the play, shrouded as it is in mysticism and superstition, but all will nevertheless agree that the players of the Comédie Française were splendid in their respective parts and that André Doderet's handling of costumes and décor was admirable.

Owing to the sudden time-beats and punctuated melodies of Rugby football, says the French composer, Arthur Honegger, it is a fit subject for a symphonic study. He is at present engaged in making music of football sounds and episodes. His "Pacific 231" tackled locomotive rhythms, and he hopes to score a touchdown with his musical interpretation of the surge of a football game. He has two things certainly already in his favor. The one is that he is a keen Rugby player and at the same time a talented—even if very modern—composer. Those familiar with the works of Claude Debussy will recall, perhaps, that his "Jeux" made use of a tennis match. This is said to be the only known precedent for the employment of a sport motif in French music.

To what extent the making of dainty dresses is part and parcel of the daily existence of Paris must come as a surprise to many. A committee appointed to investigate conditions in the dressmaking trade has announced that one out of every ten inhabitants is actively engaged in this work. This does not include those in allied industries, but refers simply to those actually employed in dressmaking houses. It has been remarked, also, that the past decade has witnessed a marked increase in business done by the couturiers. Furthermore, the fashion once decreed for those who could afford the most expensive gowns must now be adapted and translated to suit the tastes and pockets of everyone. This means that the public as a whole is better dressed than ever before.

What this capital looked like in the eighteenth century, how it lived and what it wore, is to be the central feature of the exhibition to be-held next year to celebrate the fiftieth year of the Carnavalet Museum, according to a recent announcement of the authorities. The museum houses relics of all sorts, documents, costumes, and objects associated especially with the period known as the "Revolution." This occured toward the close of the eighteenth century and marked the transition from kingdom under Louis XVI through the era of the "Revolution" to Napoleon and the dawn of his Empire. The Municipal Council has set high score by the event of the coming exhibition, putting aside 60,000 francs to help make it a

Honesty in this country is in one instance at least to be given legal recognition, provided a bill passed by the Chamber of Deputies is assented to by the Senate requiring an owner of lost money or property to give the finder 5 per cent of it or of its value. This percentage is to apply to articles or money found of a value less than 100,000 francs. Over this amount the finder is to receive 2 per cent only. Cases are frequently reported of even large sums of money being given back to those who imagined they had lost them. An instance of typical French courtesy in these motters can be seen in a decision root taken by in these matters can be seen in a decision now taken by which articles deemed of necessity for their owners will be delivered by the police department at once to them without their having to claim them at headquarters. + + +

The Rodin Museum in the Hôtel de Biron is now more than ever one of the most worth while of all places in Paris to visit. There is not only the sculpture of this ing itself, which was the home of the Maréchal de Biron, but there is a very beautiful eighteenth-century garden which has just been restored and opened to the A grass-covered mound, when laid open, was found to have covered a shallow circular stone basin some thirty feet in diameter. It had been a fountain. The ground has now been cleared and the whole garden put in order. In the middle of the basin a bronze copy of Rodin's group, Ugolin, has been set up, and four of his bronze figures have in addition been placed round the basin on stone pedestals flanked by low benches of stone. The ancient garden paths have been freshened, and Greek marbles from Rodin's house at Meudon have been put beside them. There is water in the fountain which reflects on clear days the distant dome of the Invalides.

A Question of Constitutionality TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR:

I know of nothing in political or journalistic history which comes so near a campaign of education preparaelection as your recent splendid series of monographs States. Could this same method be made of wide application in both state and national elections, the general election laws, and more particularly the system of pri-mary elections adopted in many of the states, would become matters of deep meaning to the electorate and of paramount concern to all well-intentioned citizens.

May I be pardoned for reverting to what I said some two years ago in these columns, as to the unconstitutionality of a submission or referendum, particularly by a state (and arguendo by Congress itself), upon the repeal of the Constitution of the United States or any article thereof? In the Rhode Island cases the Supreme Court passed upon the constitutionality of the Eighteenth Amendment, and declared it binding upon all states and territory of the Union, upon all courts and officers, and declared that no law could be passed that would tend to avoid or defeat its mandate.

In this the highest court in the United States merely reiterated the incidents of an inflexible Constitution such as America has, and says in effect: "We cannot change our views about the Constitution of the United States or any part thereof until we decide to change the form of our government."

In a recent issue of the Monros the dry forces (and they should be denominated the constitutionalists) are reported to have commenced injunction proceedings in the Supreme Court of Massachusetts to prevent that being done which the Supreme Court of the United States seems to have said cannot be done. It would seem, if the foregoing premises are correct, that the courts of Massachusetts would find little difficulty in defining the limitations upon seasonal or special animadversions against the fundamental law of the land by such pro-conents as Governor Ritchie (and in a measure Gov-

It recurs to me again: How can a governor of a sovereign state of the American Union, a judge, a United States Senator, or any other conscientious officer, take the oath of office required before he can assume the duties or claim the emoluments of his office, and then, after having attained the office, ever submit to (not to say recommend and even champion) the alteration, destruction, repeal, or violation of the law which he has sworn to uphold and defend to the last extremity?
